FROG LUBE

Ed Strange

I've been a shooter for 25 years, which means I've been cleaning dirty guns for just as long! I've seen and purchased many new products claiming to do everything — only to be met with disappointment. My cleaning regimen in the past included three different cleaners and lubes to perform the job. That all changed when I discovered FrogLube at this year's SHOT Show.

Larry Lasky, a retired Navy SEAL Officer, developed FrogLube. He took a step back from traditional cleaners and lubes, and came at the problem from a whole new direction. FrogLube is a "food grade" proprietary formula, made in the USA — no petroleum or hazmat in this stuff. It's a true CLP (Cleaner Lube Protectant), with a major bonus. Using either the liquid or paste, it will clean all fouling: copper, carbon, lead, you name it. The big bonus is it will soak into the microscopic pores of the metal, seasoning the metal (like an old cast iron skillet), meaning the more you use it, the more protection is left in the metal, reducing future fouling.

Rust is a thing of the past as well. Water will bead and fall away from a weapon treated with FrogLube. There's no greasy feeling on the metal and no harsh chemical smells.

So far, I've treated a 5.45x39 rifle and several 1911s. I fired 'em all, and even with corrosive com-bloc ammo, the guns were all breezes to clean. My chemistry lab-type cleaning kit is getting dust on it since I started using FrogLube, and that's not a bad thing.
